CHRIS FRANCIS CLIENTHEART

It is no coincidence that Local Splash's Chris Francis and Braveheart's Scottish landowner, Sir William Wallace, both can pull off their long, reddish-blond locks and lead a team of warriors. Trust us, it's not a walk in the park saving clients. Just ask Chris.

Chris Francis began working at Local Splash in 2011 as an Opener on the sales team. Before gracing us with his presence, Chris was an ironworker and a structural welder until the economy crashed. Now, Chris works as Local Splash's Ongoing "OG" Team Lead for Client Support. He leads his team with foolproof finesse, while keeping clients from terminating their services, demonstrating effective team leadership, and exhibiting respect and support to his teammates.

The humble Colorado native maintains a tenacious grip on life and believes that his formal education was not what brought him to where he is now, but life's lessons. As a self-proclaimed autodidact, Chris asserts that the most painful lessons shape us. These lessons are the ones that shape who we are, not only as people but as a society as well, according to Chris.

When Chris is not rescuing one client at a time, he still exudes charisma and heroics outside of Local Splash doors. Word on the street: Chris ran through a burning building once because he "felt like it was the right thing to do." No further comments were addressed. Additional cliffhangers: the mysterious splasher fearlessly grilled three pounds of bacon, unprepared for the inevitable aftermath. But how did it turn out, you ask? Mr. Francis disclosed to The Navigator stating, "It didn't turn out like I expected."

Apart from burning buildings and grilled pounds of bacon, Chris has evolved as a person since his Opener days. He is described by colleagues as "Kindhearted; the ginger with a soul." He confides that he has become a more understanding individual since he started working at Local Splash.

"It's really about the journey and the lessons learned. Getting to where I'm at today reflects more on my future path than anything else. Everything changes. That's certain," said Chris.

The hardworking Chris remains appreciative of life, and keeps his goals to a minimum so he is never disappointed. His "brave heart," fine leadership, wondrous accomplishments, and genuine relationships with his peers are proof that Chris does not need much to be happy. Spend five minutes with Chris and you will leave giggling with joy and smiling from ear to ear.

May the Ugliest Sweater Win!

It's that time of year again! Pull out your ugly sweaters and prepare to shock your coworkers with creativity and disgust. This year's Ugly Sweater Contest will be Friday, December 19th, upstairs outside of the break room at 11:15am. We will have a photobooth set up to capture all of your horrifyingly festive outfits. May the ugliest sweater win!

'TIS THE SEASON FOR REGIFTING

Still holding onto last year's gift your crazy aunt gave you? Here's your chance to regift it to a beloved coworker! Our Annual White Elephant Gift Exchange will be on Tuesday, December 23rd. To participate, bring a wrapped gift upstairs outside of the break room at 11:15am. $10 max on gifts, and please remember to make sure your gifts are work appropriate.
